All Stations and Bases 25X1A2d1 Chief. Establishment or Strengthening of Hlegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties. No Processor of the Processor of the Communist Parties of the Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World Were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparate is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparate by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked for Applications and the effect of the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. Would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e	DISPATCH	DISPAICH SYMBOLAND NO.
Chief, Establishment or Strengthening of Hegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties. 1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist parties of the Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparate is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the Approximation of the stations may obtain copies upon request. would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services.	All Stations and Bases	The state of the s
Chief, Establishment or Strengthening of Hegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties 1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Hegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked for stations most likely to have use for it; other stations may obtain copies upon request. XIA201 4. would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e
Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats By Free World Communist Parties 1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist Parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Plegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked to the country of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 4. would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services.	All the same of th	DATE
Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties 1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Megal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the contraction of the stations may obtain copies upon request. XIA221 4. Would be interested in any additional information about the development of the normal of such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e	Chief,	4 MAR 1960
In Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the communist parties of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the communist parties of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked the communist parties discusses the development of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e	Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Appar
1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Total Communist Parties discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 4. Would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e	by Free World Communist Parties
1. Since the Twelve-Party Declaration of November 1957 there has been an increased emphasis within the International Communist Movement on the establishment or improvement of clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Apparation of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 4 othe existing party organizations. These clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the local military and other internal security services, 25X1A2e othe existing party organizations. These clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the local military and other internal security services, 25X1A2e
othe existing party organizations. These clandestine apparats paralleling the existing party organizations. These clandestine structures are designed to provide legal Communist parties with a reserve organization whose members are not generally known as Communists and whose primary purpose is the continuance of Party operations should the CP be forced underground. There is reliable evidence that this aspect of Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21st CPSU Congress by Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in discussions with various Free World CP leaders. There is further evidence that various Communist parties of the Free World were urged, where conditions permit, to establish a capability for armed action. There are also indications that the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by an increased effort by each CP to penetrate its country's police and military forces. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishment or Strengthening of Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the above trend as revealed in the actions taken by certain CP's in the past two years. Appended as part of the report is a discussion of specific cases, listed by country. 3. The brief marked Action Communist Parties discusses the development of the local military and other internal security services, 25X1A2e	1. Since the Twelve Donto Date attached for stations most likely to have use for it; other stations may obtain copies upon request. X1A2d1 4.	the existing party organizations. These clandes the existing party organizations. These clandes designed to provide legal Communist parties with whose members are not generally known as Comprimary purpose is the continuance of Party ope be forced underground. There is reliable evide Party activity was stressed at the time of the 21 Soviet and Chinese Communist Party officials in Free World CP leaders. There is further evide parties of the Free World were urged, where coestablish a capability for armed action. There the emphasis on clandestine apparats is accompanied by each CP to penetrate its country's policy. 2. The attached brief entitled Establishme Illegal Apparats by Free World Communist Part ment of the above trend as revealed in the action in the past two years. Appended as part of the respectific cases, listed by country.	tine apparats paralleling stine structures are that reserve organization amunists and whose crations should the CP nee that this aspect of st CPSU Congress by discussions with various ence that various Communist anditions permit, to are also indications that anied by an increased ce and military forces. Into r Strengthening of ies discusses the developastaken by certain CP's report is a discussion of would be interested in any additional information about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e Attachment:	attached for stations most likely to have use for obtain copies upon request.	(alamata a mana about the development or improvement by CP's of illegal apparats, CP capability for armed action (such as a paramilitary force), and CP penetration of the local military and other internal security services. 25X1A2e Attachment:	4. would be interested in any	additional information
Attachment:	about the development or improvement by CP's of	of illegal apparate CD
Attachment:	penetration of the local military and other intern	al security services.
VASTER FILE COPY	25X1A2e
VASTER FILE COPY
VASTER FILE COPY
	Attachment:
		9 /
DA MAI KEWAAF LKAM LIFF
	DA WAI KEWAAF EKAW EITE	,
	53 51-28, 51-28A AND 51 29	CONTINUED One